“ We became friends when he lived in Argentina. We actually lived in the same house, shared a rental. It was a really hard time for me because my then boyfriend had serious problems with addiction. Stole from me, lied, ran away, all of it; and Ed was always there to help me see things in a different way, from a different angle. Helping me look out for myself.

Many of his heartfelt words helped me through that hardship, and stayed with me until now. He knew how to be a friend; and I did my very best to be a friend to him. I remember us being the first ones to wake up, and him calling out if I wanted my eggs sunny side up. Those early mornings around coffee and eggs are most likely the best (or even, the only good) memories I have of that time.

When he went back to the States, and I left Argentina and moved to Sweden, we often talked about him coming to visit, but that never happened.

I was happy with his happiness, sad with his sadness, and now I miss him terribly. Rest in peace, my friend. See you on the other side.
